Tom Nicholson, “Towards a Monument to Batman’s Treaty” (2013)

Themes

Dissent and disposition are both relational. To dissent is to disagree and be at variance: to refuse an established order, to diverge from orthodoxy, to oppose, critique, quarrel and rearrange. If political dissent is commonly understood as speaking truth to power, how does this occur, or occur differently, now that power is increasingly dislocated from state forms, and the production of “truth” by experts is itself subverted? How might law facilitate and energise, or suppress and silence such dissent? More than just political or legal dissent, how might these forms work alongside aesthetic, literary and artistic modes of dissent in reshaping the conduct of law, and of life?

Dispositions relate to the character, arrangements, tendencies and temperaments of conduct – arrangements of language and law, orderings of space and time, as well as proclivities and attitudes. Dispositions involve legal transfers, bestowals, and powers to dispose or control. What, then, of lawful or unlawful dispositions, as well as dispositions of literature, of images and imagination?

The Law, Literature and Humanities Association of Australasia has invited consideration of the arrangements and rearrangements of the conduct of law and life; of the dispositions of law and jurisprudence, and how these relate to dissents, resistance and transformation.

Conference streams include:

- Public Art, Public Law? (Stream convenors: Laura Petersen and Olivia Barr)
- Dissents from Environmentality, Forging Ecological Dispositions (Stream convenors: Kathleen Birrell and Julia Dehm)
- Dispositions of Disability (Stream convenor: Linda Steele)
- Cities, Spaces, Justices (Stream convenor: Peter Rush)
- Visuality (Stream convenor: Peter Rush)

Researchers and others working in any area of law or the humanities, broadly conceived, have been called to share your own engagements with dissents and dispositions. As with previous conferences, we especially welcome scholarship into relationships with indigenous jurisprudences and the humanities, Asian and Australian humanities and jurisprudences and the regional elaboration of the South.

Acknowledgment of Wurundjeri Country
We acknowledge that this conference takes place on the lands of the Wurundjeri people of the Kulin nations. We pay our respects to the Elders, forebears and families of the Wurundjeri, and of all Indigenous peoples who now share this area. As we convene this event and welcome you to join us today, we acknowledge that our ability to do so is predicated in part on the historic and ongoing acts of violence against Indigenous peoples that have taken both place here on Wurundjeri land and across the country, including the exploitation of Indigenous land, resources, labour and culture. We recognise in particular the role of law in enabling and legitimising the settler-colonial dispossession of Indigenous peoples, and acknowledge that, despite the jurisprudence of Australian courts on the matter, Indigenous sovereignty has never been ceded over this land.

Conference organisers may take photographs of proceedings throughout the conference, for use in social media or other publicity. Please let us know if you do not wish to be included in such photography.

Subversive Legacies: Law, Literature and Repetition

Drawing on law and on literature, this paper illustrates how repetition, as textual figure of speech and as practice, enables both possibilities of change and of resistance to change. Reiterating the past transforms the present and subverts it, through mechanisms that may be conducive, on the one hand, to learning new habits (routines, skill, expertise) and, on the other, to the entrenchment of old harms and embedding of trauma. Examples will include: issues of appropriation surrounding a short story by Borges; the way different stories of domestic violence emerge from recognition of "patterns" of abuse; and the strange case of semantic saturation.

Marianne Constable, Professor of Rhetoric at the University of California, Berkeley, is author of The Law of the Other: The Mixed Jury and Changing Conceptions of Citizenship, Law and Knowledge (U of Chicago Press, 1994; winner of the Law & Society Association J. Willard Hurst Prize in Legal History); Just Silences: The Limits and Possibilities of Modern Law (Princeton University Press, 2005); and Our Word is Our Bond: How Legal Speech Acts (Stanford University Press, 2014). She is currently working on two books: one on women who killed their husbands and got away with it under what was dubbed “the new unwritten law”; the other on learning and language in the written philosophical dialogue.

Freedom At Sea

This paper explores the conceptions of human freedom scripted by the laws of race and property in the early 19th century in the aftermath of the Prohibition of the international slave trade when kidnapped and enslaved Sierra Leoneans aboard La Amistad rebel against the Spaniards who bought them. Two alternative horizons of freedom are invoked in this conjuncture – the story of juridical freedom born from the marriage of liberty, trade and property on the high seas, and the story of freedom born from the ambition and risk of return, of reversing the trip across the Black Atlantic. The Sierra Leoneans take over the ship but a series of misadventures thwart their plans to sail back to West Africa. Instead they land on the American coast, are taken into custody by American officials and are to have their fate decided by American courts – courts that plot the denouement to this drama with a grammar of both liberty and servitude, dissent and dispossession. The courts disposition towards the bodies at (and of) law are shaped in its fraught navigation of the relationship between the abolition of the international slave trade, maritime law determining property rights to salvage at sea, Spain’s claims to the Amistad prisoners and the American constitution. As the case travels through the American court system, the Amistad rebels are declared juridically free, and the ship and its cargo pronounced the property of the Americans who took custody of the ship. The attack on Black humanity and the redemption of American humanism emerge inextricably intertwined.

Vasuki Nesiah is Associate Professor of Practice at New York University. Her main areas of research include the law and politics of international human rights and humanitarianism, with a particular focus on transitional justice. Her past publications have engaged with international feminisms and the history of colonialism in international law. She has also written on the politics of memory and comparative constitutionalism, with a particular focus on law and politics in South Asia. Nesiah teaches human rights, law and social theory, and the politics of war and memory at NYU. She continues as core faculty member at Harvard Law School’s Institute for Global Law and Policy (IGLP); she has taught for six years in the IGLP summer and winter workshops in Cambridge, Doha and Capetown. She is one of the founding members of the Third World Approaches to International Law (TWAIL).

Black Wombs Matter: The Post-Racial Dystopia of The Handmaid’s Tale

The Handmaid’s Tale (1985), a work of speculative fiction and an iconic feminist text by Margaret Atwood, has lately felt especially timely – not least because of Hulu’s 2017 television adaptation. In the tale’s near-future, ecological disaster and pollution have led to mass sterility and birth defects, and a violent religious coup has turned the United States into Gilead, a fundamentalist theocracy which strips women of their jobs and property, sorting them into castes with the more fertile forced into childbearing, serving as ‘handmaids’ to the barren elite. Hulu’s contemporary re-envisioning of Atwood’s dystopia lands with renewed resonance in Trump’s America with its brutal objectification of women, widespread suspension of civil rights, and an authoritarian state that fetishizes a return to ‘traditional’ or religious values. This dramatic cautionary tale of patriarchal power and the subjugation of women through their bodies appears as a perfect rejoinder to the election of a pussy-grabbing President, and intervenes in the contemporary feminist landscape of identity politics and intersectionality. The show’s casting of actors of colour as handmaids, however, transforms Gilead from the white supremacist state of the book into a post-racial dystopia in which women of all races are equally oppressed because, in the words of the showrunner, ‘fertility trumps everything.’ The inclusion of non-white actors while ignoring race at the level of narrative reflects the limitations of a white liberal feminism that fails to think through how race operates in relation to power, history and subjectivity. At the same time, the show’s diegetic failure is productive at the level of aesthetics, as the presence of women of colour in the filmic text makes possible a resistant reading that highlights a politics of race as inseparable from gender, fantasies of the nation, and women’s reproductive bodies.

Dr Karen Crawley is a lecturer at the Griffith Law School and a Managing Editor of the Australian Feminist Law Journal. She researches at the intersections of law and aesthetics, drawing on literary theory, visual culture, and critical theory. She is a graduate of the University of Sydney, with Honours in English Literature and Law, and did her postgraduate study at McGill University, Canada. She serves on the board of the Law, Literature and Humanities Association of Australasia.

Launch

This collection of essays for Law Text Culture represents an extended critical examination of ‘minor jurisprudence’, a concept that made its appearance in the 1990s but which has since lain largely fallow. In 2016, ‘minor jurisprudence’ was chosen as the subject for the fourth ‘Law As …’ symposium, held at the School of Law, University of California, Berkeley. Over two days in December eleven invited participants – ranging from the 1990s originators of the concept to current early career scholars – presented work that attempted to define, defend, utilize and/or criticize the concept. Those papers, fully revised, are presented here. Collectively, they represent the fullest and most complete examination of the interesting and potentially productive idea of minor jurisprudence ever undertaken.

Law Text Culture is a trans-continental peer reviewed journal. It publishes critical thinking and creative writing across a range of genres - from artwork and fiction to the traditional scholarly essay. Law Text Culture incites a dialogue crossing disciplines, exciting, in each, fresh perspectives along three axes of inquiry: Politics: engaging the relationship of force and resistance; Aesthetics: eliciting the relationship of judgment and expression; and Ethics: exploring the relationship of self and other.
Penny Pether Prize

During the conference the Law, Literature and Humanities Association of Australasia will be awarding the third biennial Penny Pether Prize for Scholarship in law, literature and the humanities. Penny Pether (1957-2013) was an Australian scholar whose passionate life-long commitment to the field pervaded every aspect of her research, teaching and academic life. She helped convene the first conference of the Law and Literature Association and founded the interdisciplinary journal Law Text Culture. She was a mentor to younger academics and graduate students in the field. She held, demanded, and advocated the highest standards of interdisciplinary scholarly endeavour. The Penny Pether Prize reflects and honours her commitments. The winner of the 2015 Penny Pether Prize was Professor Alison Young for Street Art, Public City: Law, Crime and the Urban Imagination (Routledge, 2014).

The winner of the 2013 Penny Pether Prize was Professor Bill MacNeil for Novel Judgements: Legal Theory as Fiction (Routledge-Cavendish, 2011).

Uncle Bill Nicholson

Uncle Bill Nicholson is a Wurundjeri Elder and works as the Education Manager at the Wurundjeri Tribe Land Compensation and Cultural Heritage Council. Uncle Bill first started working for his community in 1995 as Wurundjeri cultural officer. The role of cultural officer included research and the presentation of Wurundjeri history and culture to the wider community. This role has led to Uncle Bill teaching cultural education with all types of community groups, all levels of schools, professional development and cross cultural training courses.

Uncle Bill has been involved in a multitude of community festivals in the Melbourne region and has also managed Wurundjeri dance group Jindi Worabak in the past. He was also lead supervisor at the Community Development Employment Program from 2001-2003 for the Toorong Aboriginal Corporation of Dandenong.

Uncle Bill was awarded the Churchill Scholarship in 2015 and as a result he has only recently returned back from a trip to New Zealand, Canada and America to promote cross cultural relations, and learn about the different approaches and programs used by other First Nation peoples.

MONUMENTAL in a small-town way

The display posters are part of a public arts engagement of residents, artists and thinkers who were invited to respond to a public monument by Mark Eagan, sculptor. Commissioned and then gifted to the town of Alice Springs by the Freemasons in 2010, the monument, of the European explorer John McDouell Stuart is said to celebrate the explorer’s traverse of inland Australia in the 1870s.

Public commentary is the subject of these posters. It was titled: ‘John McDouell Stuart, audience – statue – man’ and asked... how he is depicted... where it is placed... who gave it... and how was it given... what costs were met with public funds... were arts policy protocols followed... who was he... how relevant is a human statue as public art... who is the artist... what limits does the statue place on the complex reality... whose story is being told... who is the audience... who is this for? The invitation has over 20 respondents who are drawn from many publics and many audiences, and who practice many approaches to artistry, commentary and documentation of the past through public art.

Public Art Walk

As part of the 'Public Art, Public Law?' conference stream we have organised a walking tour of public art through Melbourne's CBD to be led by Eddie Butler-Bowdon, Program Manager of the Art and Heritage Collection at the Melbourne City Council.

The tour will include some examples of historical public art as well as the latest commission by the Council situated near RMIT. We anticipate it will be an opportunity to get out of the University conference rooms and into the dynamic of the streets, giving our discussions some texture and movement.

Please note that due to the logistics of guiding a group through the CBD, numbers are very restricted and so unfortunately participation is limited to participants in the public art stream.

With regret this is a closed event
